School: Learning Under the Same Sky Project	LA: China, UK & US
Teacher:	Students: Many schools - secondary

Learning Focus: To reflect on the impact of world events with other children worldwide.
Curriculum Focus: Geography > World Affairs
Tools used: Wiki, WikiLink

How this worked in practice: The children involved in this activity were all aware of the Presidential race between Barack Obama and John McCain, and began to discuss and debate the impact that each candidate would have on their own country (US and China) if either man were to become president.

After the elections had completed, children began to look at this in more detail and asked each other key questions about the impact, the new laws and changes in regulations and the consequences that these would have within and beyond the USA. Each child asked a question within the Wiki seen above, and then turned these questions into WikiLinks so that other children could click on the questions and then answer them, seeing and building upon the responses of previous children.

By the end of this sequence of work children had developed skills in:

Geography: Impact of World Events

Learning: Debate, Discussion, Co-Construction, Differing view points

Next Steps: The children could now keep a blog reflecting upon the events taking place before, during and after events such as these. They could also collectively report upon specific events which take place using the News tool.
